Essential Methods Software releases Monkey Explorer

Alexandria, VA -- 2/15/2006 -- Essential Methods Software announced today the release of a new software product Monkey Explorer 1.0. Monkey Explorer allows for scheduled keyword searches of specific web pages and reports the results via desktop notification, email or other program of your choice. It is the first desktop software available to perform a webpage defined micro-search in a market filled with mega-search engines such as Google®, Yahoo®, and MSN®. Monkey Explorer is available for download from the Essential Methods website or at <http://www.monkeyexplorer.com>.

Version 1.0 now introduces:

- Micro-search web pages for specific words or phrases
- Reverse Micro-search, reports when word/phrase has not been found
- Case sensitive or unbiased text search
- Result reporting via desktop notification, via configurable email message, and/or by running custom application
- Scan scheduling feature
- Multiple simultaneous keyword searches across multiple web pages

Searching web pages for predefined words and phrases could not be easier. Monkey Explorer's intuitive wizard guides the user through creating their first keyword search. Monkey Explorer can run multiple searches at the same time, so the user can search and detect text from multiple web pages simultaneously. Monkey Explorer can be effectively used for many different tasks such as searching for names and other text, checking/verifying website changes, monitoring online auctions, and much more.

For additional information or a sample copy of Monkey Explorer please go to the Essential Methods Website or <http://www.monkeyexplorer.com>
